

Dangerous Family Secrets

It's been called "the pandemic inside the pandemic." According to the Centers for Disease Control (CDC), it impacts about 1 in 4 women and nearly 1 in 10 men. And it's a topic that no one really likes to talk about: Intimate Partner Violence (IPV), also sometimes called "domestic violence" or "family violence." The CDC defines IPV as "a serious, preventable public health problem that affects millions of Americans. The term "intimate partner violence" describes physical violence, sexual violence, stalking, or psychological harm by a current or former partner or spouse. This type of violence can occur among heterosexual or same-sex couples and does not require sexual intimacy." Many research studies and public officials around the country note that IPV has been spiking throughout the pandemic, partly contributed to by increased isolation and stressors such as job loss and financial worries. Many victims of IPV are reluctant to talk about it or seek help due to fear or shame. It's a dangerous family secret that all-too-often stays hidden until serious injury or death occurs.

If you, a friend, relative or a person you care about might be in an abusive situation, learn more at our Workplace & Intimate Partner Violence Center. You'll find videos, articles, links and tools on this important topic. Learn about early warning signs, how to make a safety plan, and where to find shelters in your local area. If you are in immediate danger, call 911. Otherwise, call the National Domestic Violence Hotline at 1-800-799-7233 (SAFE) or 1-800-787-3224 (TTY) or call your EAP.

Of course, not all serious family problems involve violence. You can login to www.HealthCareEAP.com to explore topics related to interpersonal relationships, parenting, and family matters, or you can call the helpline for counseling or coaching to get help for any relationship problems or issues that you may experience.
