When The News Is Too Much...

It seems like the news is worse than ever, but that's partly due to the 24-hour nature of our modern news cycle, magnified further by social media.

Never before in history did people have so much access to so much news in living color and excruciating detail. When painful events occur, it can be too much. You don't have to be directly involved in events to be affected - you can experience "vicarious trauma" that some call "the cost of caring."

An unhealthy obsession with terrible news can lead to increased stress, anxiety, pessimism, isolation, and other problems.

Experts say the best remedy for vicarious trauma is strictly rationing your exposure to the news and to social media. Allocate a certain amount of time to news and social media each day and then detach. Spend time with positive people. Take positive actions, such as donating to victims or volunteering for a cause.

Exercise and spend time outdoors. If the news causes too much stress or anxiety, consider professional counseling with your MAP!

Prep Now to Ease Back to School Stress

As summer winds down, families should lay the groundwork for the transition of "back to school" by re-establishing healthy routines and patterns. New schedules can pose challenges for adults and kids alike. Minimize potential stress by prepping a few weeks in advance. Work with your kids to map out plans, times and rules for homework, chores, hobbies, and free time. Here are tips to consider when planning:

- Talk to your kids about how they feel about returning to school. Understand and address their hopes and concerns for the new school year.
- Wrap up loose ends. Finish summer assignments and plan post-school extracurricular activities for the coming year.
- Set regular times for turning in at night and getting up in the morning. Establish a healthy breakfast time and routine.

New Suicide & Crisis Lifeline

Starting on July 16, 2022, call or text 988 to reach the National Suicide Prevention Lifeline if you experience thoughts of suicide or a mental health/substance use crisis. People can also call if they are worried about a loved one who needs crisis support.

Cycling Safety

Summer is a great time for you to enjoy that bicycle, but it's also peak time for biking-related injuries and deaths. Here are summer cycling safety resources.

- Plan safe routes to and from school. Check them out in advance. Review pedestrian, bike, and bus safety rules with your children.
- Make sure backpack loads are appropriate for kids. Backpacks should weigh no more than 10% of a child's body weight.
- Have a family emergency plan and drill. Include a communication plan and set meeting points both at home and in central places should you not be able to return home. Train all kids in making 9-1-1 calls.
- Watch for signs of stress. Each fresh school year can bring fresh challenges. Watch for signs of stress and adjustment as kids adapt to new teachers, academic challenges, and peer interactions.

If you or a family member faces a challenging or stressful situation during this transition, call your MAP 24-7 for help, support, and tools! Be sure to check out resources for families and parents in our online Work/Life Center.
